Pursues Thieves With CT Revolver, Shoots Himself

Awakened from his slumbers early this morning by the cackling of the hens in a coop in the yard of his home, William Hollard, colored, of Fiftyeighth and Jay streets northeast, seized his trusty revolver from a bureau drawer and started on a quiet hunt for the thieves he believed were trying to steal his next, Sunday's din-

But in his excitement Hollard became unsteady of foot stumbled. And as he fell revolver was discharged the bullet entered his right foot. The report of the shot frightened off the thieves, and although he today is suffering from the bullet wound Hollard is contented as the marauder did not succeed in getting any of his chickens.

V'C Agnes Ayres in Triple Role at Loew's Columbia

GNES AYRES has a triple role in "Borderland," the picturization of the story of he same name by Beulah Marie Dix, which began a week's engage nent at Loew's Columbia Theater yesterday afternoon. The play was directed by Paul Powell with a cast that includes Milton Sills. Fred Huntley, Bertram Grassby, Casson Ferguson, Ruby Lafayette Sylvia Ashton, Frankie Lee, Mar Jane Irving. Dale Fuller and Wal-

The story concerns a young matron who is warned from the path of folly by the spirit of an incestor who made the same error fifty years before. There are two distinct plots in the story and two separate sets of characters. Miss Ayres is first seen as the young wife who believes herself neglect ed by her husband and finds con solation in the company of her husband's cousin, with whom she agrees to a rendezvous.

Dora Beckett, the spirit of one of he young wife's ancestors, at tempts to warn the young wife not to tread the path she herself trod. Dora, fifty years before, had been married to a harsh old man, and they had one child. About to elope with a sailor, she turned back to save her daughter from a burning house and was drowned This message is subtly conveyed to the young wife of the present day, who drives furiously back to the private school where her little son is kept and is just in time to prevent his death by an acident Thus warned, she turns from the path of folly to the love of her child and husband.

The Columbia Symphony Orchesra, under the direction of Leon Brusilof provides excellent music and there are several short films.

LOEW'S PALACE— Ethel Clayton.

THEL CLAYTON, beautiful Paramount screen star, has an aptitude at portraying problems of real life in a natural manner, as shown in her performance in "Her Own Money." Miss Clayton's latest production, which began a four-day engagement at Loew's Palace Theater yesterday afternoon. Miss Clayton is finely supported by a cast that includes Warner Baxter as leading man. Charles French, Clarence Burton, Mae Busch. Jean Acker, and Roscoe Karns

Miss Clayton has the role of a young wife, who by strict econ omy manages to save enough from her household funds to buy a little home. A situation arises wherein her husband must have $2,000 to hold a real estate option he believes profitable. Knowing her husband to be rather irresponsible, the wife arranges with friend to loan the husband her

When she again turns her attention to a new home, she learns that her hand has managed to rehabilitate bought a home for them both. reconciliation is effected in charming climax.

The Palace Symphony Orchestra, under Thomas Joseph Gannon contributes a beautiful overture and musical accompaniment and short films round out the bill.

Colonial Beach.

ONE of the largest week end crowds this summer visited Colonial Beach on the Saturday afternoon and Sunday morning trips on the steamer St. Johns. The beach, swept by cool breezes. continues the mecca of hundreds who desire a water trip down the historic Potomac and excellent salt water bathing. The many entertainment features at the beach equal those of the Atlantic resorts and did a capacity business. In addition to bathing, the crowds indulged in boating, fishing, auto riding and dancing, the last named on the large over-the-sea dancing Sokolov's orchestra.

Chesapeake Beach.

CHESAPEAKE BEACH yesterday was ablaze with brilliant costumes, with modern mermaids disporting in the surf. The boardwalk presented a rare display of fashions. Thousands enjoyed the bay breezes and watched the passing ships or the strutting damsels.

Seven hundred automobiles took advantage of the new road and vistited the Beach. The beautiful picnic grounds were the seene of many outing parties. The free dance pavilion was thronged. Amusement Wonderland was in gala attire, with all its attractions doing a thriving business.

Film Actors Just Happen Avers Keaton

BUSTER KEATON, he of the frozen visage, has been asked numerous times for the best method of breaking into the movies.

"Very few people ever get into the movie comedies with malice and aforethought," says Buster. "It is very seldom that we hear of anyone who went directly into comedies with the purpose in mind of rising to the top of that branch of the metion picture profession. F' instance," continues

Buster, "Charley Chaplin was on the stage before he was lured by the blinking eye of the camera. Harold Lloyd was a college student; and a majority of the other favorites started on the legitimate stage and took an experimental fly into the movies. only to become permanent fixtures in the comedy field. The same goes for me."

A feature is the showing of the chief beauties among the sixty models with the Hamilton and Lady Duff Gordon in fashion revues, and style shows who are used in staging an elaborate fashion show at one point in the story. The action also affords opportunity for a brief display of the figure which made Miss Prevost the queen of the bathing girl beauties two three years ago.
The "Autumn"

and "Winter" episodes of "The Four Seasons" series are up to the standard set by the first two numbers seen at the Rialto last week, which is high praise indeed. This number is finely interpreted by a special orchestral score arranged by Di-rector George Wild, the intro-ductory overture being from Georges Bizet's "Carmen.

Metropolitan Presents Two Good Comedies

HARLES RAY and Buster Keaton contested for popular favor yesterday at Crandall's Metropolitan Theater, the former in "Smudge," and the latter in "The Blacksmith," with honors

"Smudge" is Rob Wagner's

screen version of his own short story of the California orange belt and affords Ray opportunity to depart agreeably from his accustomed role of unsophisticated rustic to assume the part of a young colrunning his father's newspaper. The great issue in a political campaign that is raging is the use of smudge pots. The fruit growers insist that the town of Citrona will collapse without the orange industry: the housewives forming the women's party charge that smudge may save the trees but that it ruins everything else in The paper has always been on the side of the fruit men, but the young editor succumbs to the charms of a pretty face and other feminine arguments and changes Then the real excite ment starts and does not end until the young editor has been kid naped, escaping just in time to geout a last-minute extra and save the day. Also he succeeds in inventing a smokeless smudge pot and winning the girl. It's a great story well told. Buster Keston has never been more amusing than in "The Blacksmith," which begins with travestied quotations from Longfellow's poem and ends in a riot of mirth. There is nothing that this young artisan doesn't tackle, from mending his watch at the forge to equipping a riding horse with shock ab sorbers and another with fancy sport shoes.
